To whom it may concern,

As a father all we do is pay and pay child support. We can not claim the child at tax time, we simply have to pay through the nose. If we continue our education, get a degree and start a career we have to pay even more because our income goes up and the mother collects on our efforts. Fathers have always come in last with the current system. Both Parents are suppose to carry health insurance, but who is really checking? As fathers we pay for health coverage, child support, clothing and food for every other weekend visits? Where is the return on investment? We don't have the children long enough to in steel family values, but we continue to pay more every other year. I am in favor of the change to the current system anything is better than what is in place. I agree that children need the money, but some mothers are using the system to bleed us poor fathers dry. How about putting a cap on the amount of support any father should have to pay? Create a child support credit card for food and clothes, ect to help see where the money is being spent. Not all Mothers are using the money for child support.
